

A Seussical bouquet

Written April 6, 2020

I thought I'd depart from my usual essay format in favor of a photographic posting this evening. But first, a bit of background is in order:

You are likely aware of the theatrical tradition of bringing your favorite thespian a bouquet of flowers on opening night. So, when our daughter Angela was opening as the Cat in the Hat in Seussical the musical recently, we set out to do just that. But then I got to thinking a think and suggested we consider a Seuss-ish bouquet to go with the theme for the evening. The think would have stopped there had it not been for Mary.

A quick stop at the party store for supplies and twenty minutes in the lobby of a fast food restaurant for construction and we had the bouquet you see here. The folks in the hamburger joint were as excited as we were and the bouquet was a hit. (And as I've said time and again, I married well.)

